

DECISION ON ADMISSIBILITY AND MERITS

Date of adoption: 18 August 2022

Case no. 2016-29

Sladana Savić

Against

EULEX

The Human Rights Review Panel (“the Panel”), sitting on 18 August 2022 with the following members present:

Ms Snježana BOKULIĆ, Acting Presiding Member
Mr Petko PETKOV, Member

Assisted by:
Mr Ronald HOOGHIEMSTRA, Legal Officer

Having considered the aforementioned complaint, introduced pursuant to Council Joint Action 2008/124/CFSP of 4 February 2008, the EULEX Accountability Concept of 29 October 2009 on the establishment of the Human Rights Review Panel and the Rules of Procedure of the Panel as last amended on 11 December 2019,

Having deliberated through electronic means in accordance with Rule 13(3) of the Panel’s Rules of Procedure, decides as follows:

I. PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE PANEL

1. The complaint in this case was registered on 22 September 2016.
2. On 29 June 2017, the Panel requested the complainant to provide additional information regarding her complaint. The complainant did not respond to that letter.
3. On 8 December 2017, the Panel transmitted a Statement of Facts and Questions to the Head of Mission (“HoM”), EULEX Kosovo, inviting the Mission to submit answers and written observations on the complaints no later than 26 January 2018.

4. By letter of 17 January 2019, the Mission was requested to provide answers to the questions by 16 February 2019.
5. By letter of 8 April 2019, the Mission was again requested to provide answers to the questions as soon as practical.
6. By letter of 20 June 2019, the complainant was informed that the case was communicated to the Mission and the case is still under review.
7. By letter of 18 September 2020, the Panel informed the Mission that, in order to expedite proceedings, the Panel intended to deal with issues of admissibility and merit at the same time in a single decision. To that end, the Panel invited the Mission to provide its submissions on merit in those cases where it had already provided its comments on admissibility.
8. On 17 January 2022, the HoM submitted his observations on the case.
9. On 31 January 2022, the HoM's letter was submitted for information to the complainant, who was given time until 7 March 2022 to make any further submissions in response to that letter. The complainant did not provide a response.
10. No further submissions were received in this case.

II. COMPOSITION OF THE PANEL

11. Following the resignation of one of its External Members, the panel will sit in this matter with only two members in accordance with Rule 14 of the Panel's Rules of Procedure.

III. FACTS

12. The facts of the case, as they appear from the complaint, can be summarised as follows.
13. On 10 July 1999, the complainant's husband, Staniša Stojanović, went missing in the municipality of Viti/Vitina, Gjilan/Gnilane Region.
14. On the same day - 10 July 1999, the complainant reported the disappearance of her husband to KFOR and UNMIK.
15. In the afternoon hours the complainant reported the disappearance to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).
16. Since that day the complainant has never been contacted by any authorities nor has she received any information about her husband.
17. On an unspecified date in 2005 the War Crimes Investigation Unit issued an Ante-Mortem Investigation Report with regard to two people, one of whom was the complainant's husband.
18. The complainant was not informed about this and the case was kept "open".
19. The documents handed over from UNMIK do not contain the information about what investigative steps, if any, were carried out by UNMIK.

IV. COMPLAINT AND STANDING

20. The complainant alleges that there has never been any investigation into the disappearance and killing of her husband who went missing in July 1999.
21. The Panel considers that the complaint relates to at least two particular fundamental rights reflected in the following provisions: Article 2 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (“the Convention”), which guarantees a person’s fundamental right to life and, under its procedural head, provides for an obligation to investigate cases of suspicious deaths; and, Article 3 of the Convention which guarantees a person’s right not to be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.
22. In addition, the complaint might be relevant to the rights provided in Articles 8 and 13 of the same Convention, which guarantee, respectively, the right to a family life, and the right to an effective remedy to anyone whose rights and freedoms provided in the Convention have been violated. The same rights are protected by a number of other international treaties, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.
23. Considering the close family relationship between the primary victim - Staniša Stojanović – and the complainant – Slađana Savić (husband and wife) – the Panel is satisfied that the complainant may be regarded as a secondary victim of the alleged violations and that, as such, a potential victim in accordance with Rule 25(1) of the Panel’s Rules of Procedure.

V. SUBMISSIONS OF THE PARTIES REGARDING ADMISSIBILITY

The complainant

24. As summarised above, the complainant alleges that, in the exercise of its executive mandate, EULEX Kosovo should have investigated the disappearance and killing of her husband and culpably failed to do so in violation of her and her husband’s fundamental rights. According to her statement she has never been informed about her husband’s whereabouts.

Head of Mission (“HoM”)

25. In the cover letter to his submissions, the HoM indicates that there may be information held by the Serbian Commission for Missing Persons regarding the existence of a body presumably belonging to the complainant’s husband.
26. The HoM also indicates that, in the framework of the hand-over of cases and case-files from UNMIK to EULEX in the period December 2008 to March 2009, the War Crimes Investigation Unit – WCIU of EULEX received documents relating to the disappearance of Staniša Stojanović. At the moment of hand-over from UNMIK to EULEX, the case of Staniša Stojanović was included in the UNMIK Missing Persons Unit – MPU database of missing persons and was with status “open”.
27. In particular, the Mission states that,

“As a part of the handover from UNMIK Police the EULEX War Crimes Investigation Unit – WCIU received an UNMIK Ante-Mortem Investigation Report from 2005

referring to two missing individuals, including Staniša Stojanović (potentially mixing the two cases), indicating that no witnesses had been interviewed, and that the information available had been collected from the Humanitarian Law Center database.”

28. Regarding the recording and categorization of cases handed over from UNMIK to EULEX, the Mission indicates that besides the case-files that EULEX received from UNMIK in 2008-2009, there were also several databases in Microsoft Access that were handed over. These included one for “war crimes” police files and another for “missing persons” cases. The record of Staniša Stojanović was empty in this latter database, due to the information that he was deceased.
29. Regarding the extent to which the Mission took steps to identify and investigate cases of enforced disappearances and/or killing, the Mission states, inter alia, that,

“The Council Joint Action 2008/124/CFSP on the European Union Rule of Law Mission in Kosovo, in force at the time of EULEX executive mandate in the criminal justice system, did not contain any explicit reference to ‘enforced disappearances’. The Provisional Criminal Code of Kosovo (UNMIK REG. 2003/25) and the Kosovo Criminal Code (No. 04/L-082) that replaced it, as well as the current Kosovo Criminal Code (No. 06/L-074), refer to enforced disappearances as one of the offences, which, under certain circumstances, can constitute crimes against humanity, not war crimes. Enforced disappearances were also not foreseen under the criminal law applicable in Kosovo during and just after the conflict, including the 1976 Criminal Code of the Socialist Federative Republic of Yugoslavia. EULEX, albeit indirectly, investigated and prosecuted instances of enforced disappearances in the framework of war crimes cases.”
30. Regarding the involvement of organs of EULEX in the present case, the Mission points out that,

“EULEX police did not contact UNMIK authorities in relation to this case. However the, the EULEX Forensic Team has been in contact with the Serbian Commission for Missing Persons on many occasions including in the past two years and hopes that the complainant will be contacted by these authorities in the coming period and be provided with information on her husband.”
31. The Mission also indicates that,

“[...] a fair assessment of the conduct of EULEX under the procedural head of Article 2 and under Article 3 of the Convention in relation to this specific case, has to take into account the magnitude of the challenge posed by the very high number of crimes as well as the context and the circumstances in which the Mission was called to implement its mandate.”
32. In its submissions in respect of these provisions, the Mission takes note of the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights and of the Human Rights Review Panel in similar cases and does not dispute the admissibility of this complaint under Articles 2 and 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

VI. THE PANEL'S ASSESSMENT REGARDING THE ADMISSIBILITY OF THIS CASE

Mandate of the Panel (Rule 25, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Procedure) and inherent limitations placed on the Mission regarding the protection of human rights.

33. As noted above, the HoM does not dispute the admissibility of this case.
34. Having reviewed the relevant requirements of admissibility, the Panel is satisfied that the case is indeed admissible.

VII. SUBMISSIONS OF THE PARTIES REGARDING THE MERITS OF THE CASE

The Complainant

35. As noted above, the complainant alleges that, in the exercise of its executive mandate, EULEX Kosovo should have investigated the disappearance of her husband and prosecuted the perpetrators, and that EULEX culpably failed to do so in violation of her and her husband's fundamental rights. The Panel has determined above that the present complainant should be considered in the light of Articles 2 (procedural limb), 3, 8 and 13 of the European Convention of Human Rights.

The Head of Mission

36. The Mission in its submissions described some of the practical challenges associated with the investigation of this sort of cases and acknowledged that the management of the files it received from UNMIK has been particularly challenging.
37. The Mission clarified that under its current mandate EULEX is not authorized to disclose information on ongoing investigations that it has obtained during its monitoring activities. The Mission submits that,

“Therefore, when inviting complainants to contact the competent institutions, the Mission is simply referring them to the authorities that are, under the law, competent and authorized to release information to them in relation to any investigative steps they may have undertaken since the end of EULEX executive mandate in the criminal justice system in June 2018.”

38. With regard to its human rights obligations, the Mission recalls that:

“[...] the procedural obligation under Article 2 of [the European Convention on Human Rights, is one ‘of means’ and ‘not of result’. Crucial in the assessment of its implementation is that ‘the authorities have done all that could reasonably be expected of them in the circumstances of the case.’ (See, for example, European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) Trivkanović v. Croatia, no. 12986/13, Judgment of 6 July 2017, para. 78; Borojević and others v. Croatia, no. 70273/11, Judgment of 4 April 2017, para. 57; Nježić and Štimac v. Croatia, no. 29823/13, Judgment of 9 April 2015, para. 69).”

39. In addition, the Mission recalled that,

“[...] the nature and degree of scrutiny must be assessed on the basis of all relevant facts and with regard to the practical realities of investigation work.’ (See, for example, ECtHR Cindrić and Bešlić vs Croatia, no. 72152/13, Judgment of 6 September 2016, para.69; Zdjelar and others v. Croatia, no. 80960/12, Judgment of 6 July 2017, para. 83; Velcea and Mazare v. Romania, no. 64301/01, Judgment of 1 December 2009, para. 105; and Armani da Silva v United Kingdom, no. 5878/08 5878/08, Judgment of 30 March 2016, para.234).”

40. The Mission also submitted that,

“As acknowledged in the Panel’s consolidated case law, as well as in the relevant case law of the UNMIK Human Rights Advisory Panel, expectations upon the ability of a rule of law mission such as EULEX to investigate and prosecute cases such as the present one should be ‘realistic’ and ‘proportionate’. An assessment of what is ‘realistic’ and ‘proportionate’ in relation to a single case, must take into account ‘all relevant facts’ and ‘the realities of investigative work’ as described in the Mission’s submissions.”

41. In particular, the Mission submitted that,

“According to the ‘Kosovo Memory Book’ of the Humanitarian Law Centre Kosovo, more than 13,000 individuals of which over 10,000 civilians, were killed or went missing in the period 1998-2000. The scale of the crimes committed entails that expectations upon the ability of a rule of law mission such as EULEX to investigate and prosecute these cases should be realistic and proportionate.”

42. Therefore, the Mission contended that,

“The inability to investigate an alleged enforced disappearance cannot be deemed a violation of human rights, when the failure to investigate materializes in a context of large-scale crimes involving thousands of victims and where it is clear that no investigative authority may be expected to resolve all cases brought before it. This consideration applies a fortiori to a situation where the authority responsible is not a State, but an international Mission with limited resources at its disposal and a time-limited mandate (since its inception in 2008 the EULEX mandate has been extended every two years).”

43. The Mission also acknowledged that,

“[...] the management of the files inherited from UNMIK was a challenge and that [the Mission] was unable to rectify many inconsistencies and duplications. It also acknowledges that its police and prosecutorial units should have ensured better communication with victims and victims’ relatives, and also with the wider public. However, it maintains that it would have been simply disproportionate to expect that the Mission could investigate all killings, suspicious deaths and disappearances and reopen cases that had already been terminated by the UNMIK authorities.”

44. The Mission stated further that it,

“[...] does not dispute that the complainant has a right to know what happened to her husband and it stands ready to continue supporting Kosovo and Serbian institutions in clarifying his fate in line with its current mandate.”

45. The Mission submitted that the circumstances in which EULEX was called to implement its mandate required the prioritization of some cases over others. Nevertheless, the Mission did acknowledge in its submissions that its police and prosecutorial units could have ensured better communication with victims and their relatives, and kept the wider public informed about its strategies and approaches, with a view to managing expectations more adequately and to be more transparent.

46. However, the Mission maintained that in the present case, and considering the fundamental obstacles with which it was presented, it does not consider that the complainant's rights were violated.

Submissions in reply

47. On 31 January 2022, the Mission's submissions on the merits of the case were forwarded to the complainant, who was invited to submit her comments on the merits of the case, if any, no later than 7 March 2022.
48. No further submissions were received in this case.

VIII. THE PANEL'S ASSESSMENT REGARDING THE MERITS OF THIS CASE

General considerations

49. The Mission was required to fulfill its executive responsibilities in a manner consistent with relevant human rights standards. This implied, inter alia, that it would investigate cases within its jurisdictional competence that involved the violation of rights guaranteed under Articles 2 and 3 of the European Convention of Human Rights. Regarding the relevant legal standards applicable, see: HRRP, Case-Law Note on the Duty to Investigate Allegations of Violations of Rights, pp. 3-5 (and cited case-law); and Sadiku-Syla against EULEX, 2014-34, Decision and Findings, 19 October 2016, para. 36; D.W., E.V., F.U., G.T., Zlata Veselinović, H.S., I.R. against EULEX, 2014-11 to 2014-17, Decision on Admissibility, 30 September 2015, para. 88; Sadiku-Syla against EULEX, 2014-34, Decision on Admissibility, 29 September 2015, para. 58. See also ECtHR: Nachova and Others v Bulgaria, Application nos. 43577/98 and 43579/98, Judgment of 6 July 2005, para. 110; Hugh Jordan v. the United Kingdom, Application no. 24746/94, Judgment 4 May 2001, para. 105; McCann and Others v. the United Kingdom, Judgment of 27 September 1995, Series A no. 324, para. 161; Assenov and Others v. Bulgaria, Judgment of 28 October 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VIII, para. 102.
50. It also required the Mission to keep relatives of the missing adequately apprised of its efforts to investigate this case. HRRP, Case-Law Note on the Duty to Investigate Allegations of Violations of Rights, pp. 28-30 (and cited case-law); and L.O. against EULEX, 2014-32, Decision and Findings, 11 November 2015, paras 61-63; U.F. Against EULEX, 2016-12, Decision and Findings, 12 February 2020, para 97; Milijana Avramović against EULEX, Decision and Findings, Case no. 2016-17, 4 June 2019, para 55; S.H. against EULEX, Decision and Findings, case no. 2016-28, 11 September 2019, para. 66; Desanka and Zoran Stanisić against EULEX, 2012-22, 11 November 2015, para. 66; see also Ahmet Özkan and Others v. Turkey, Application no. 21689/93, ECtHR Judgment of 6 April 2004, paras. 311-314; Isayeva v. Russia, Application no. 57950/00, ECtHR Judgment of 24 February 2005 paras. 211-214; Al-Skeini and Others v. United Kingdom, Application no. 55721/07, ECtHR Judgment of 7 July 2011, para. 167).
51. The present case, as well as other cases of enforced disappearance/missing persons, fell right within the scope of those competences and responsibilities.

52. The Mission advances a number of arguments to try to explain its failure to investigate the present case (and other similar cases) and to keep the relatives of the disappeared in this case properly informed.
53. The Panel notes that most of those arguments have already been raised and rejected in earlier cases of the same sort. The Panel will therefore limit its considerations of those arguments to what is strictly necessary to the resolution of the present case.

Challenges associated with the investigation of missing persons/enforced disappearance cases

54. The Head of Mission suggests that the Mission's conduct in relation to individual cases should be considered in light of the overall challenge, which the investigation of all missing persons cases represented for the Mission. The Panel shares this view only up to a point.
55. It is correct, as the Panel has repeatedly acknowledged, that the task facing the Mission was daunting. At the beginning of its mandate, there were hundreds of cases involving serious violations of human rights for the Mission to investigate. It is also correct that its resources – in expertise, finances and personnel – were limited. In addition, these difficult investigations were to be conducted with only limited support from local authorities and in a post-conflict situation that would have rendered a difficult situation even more challenging. Furthermore, the Mission inherited records from UNMIK had been poorly kept and organised. This required the Mission to conduct its own, repeated, review of those records. Regarding these difficulties, see also: U.F. Against EULEX, 2016-12, Decision and Findings, 12 February 2020, para 60; L.O. against EULEX, 2014-32, 11 November 2015, pars 43-45; A,B,C,D against EULEX, 2012- 09 to 2012-12, 20 June 2013, para 50; K to T against EULEX, 2013-05 to 2013-14, 21 April 2015, para. 53; Sadiku-Syla against EULEX, 2014-34, Decision on Admissibility, 29 September 2015, paras. 35-37; D.W., E.V., F.U., G.T., Zlata Veselinović, H.S., I.R. against EULEX, 2014-11 to 2014-17, Decision on Admissibility, 30 September 2015, paras. 72-74; see also Human Rights Advisory Panel of UNMIK (HRAP) Decision in cases nos. 248/09, 250/09 and 251/09, 25 April 2013, para. 35 and paras 70-71.
56. The argumentation contained in the submission of the Head of Mission pointing at its limitations does not relate, however, to this specific case. Instead, it reflects systemic shortcomings of the Mission, including these: a general lack of adequate planning for investigations and prosecutions; a lack of policy of prioritisation of cases; a lack of focus on cases involving serious human rights violations; a lack of prompt and effective investigations; a general failure to inform relatives of missing persons; no clear policy on cases of enforced disappearances and no prioritisation thereof; meagre number of “resolved” missing persons cases; unreasonable reliance on records and determination of UNMIK (see, e.g. Q.J. against EULEX, 2016-23, Decision and Findings, 11 December 2020, paras. 45-47; Vesko Kandić against EULEX, 2016-24, Admissibility Decision and Decision and Findings, 11 December 2020, paras 80-84); questionable practices by prosecutorial staff (See e.g. W. against EULEX, 2011-07, Decision and Findings, 10 April 2013, paras. 34-35; F. and Others against EULEX, 2011-27, Decision and Findings, 5 December 2017, paras. 60-63); acts carried out without clear legal basis (See e.g. W. against EULEX, 2011-07, Decision and Findings, 10 April 2013, paras. 41-43; G.T. against EULEX, 2019-01, Decision and Findings, 11 December 2020, para. 70); failure to request relevant records from potential sources of information (e.g., ICRC; Serbian authorities; OSCE). These factors, and others, are all apparent from cases that have come before the Panel. These are not the consequences of challenges associated with the Mission's mandate or with a lack of resources. They are the consequence of poor planning, inadequate operational management of investigations and prosecutions, absence of clear policy of cases prioritisation, failure to put in place a system of communication with relatives of missing persons and failure to have a clear investigative and prosecutorial policy in respect of this sort of cases. They also demonstrate an inability by the Mission to ensure that the planning and implementation of its activities consistently take into account the Mission's human rights obligations.

57. The Panel wishes to point out in passing that the Mission realised already during the hand-over process that the conditions of the files transferred were far from adequate. Hence, the Mission should have been alerted that it needed to approach and rely upon those records with caution. It should also have alerted it to the need to ensure that its ability to fulfil its obligations was not negatively affected by those records. As the newly established Mission, EULEX Kosovo was expected to act with due diligence and in compliance with its human rights obligations. For the purpose of understanding the extent of its tasks in the post-conflict environment it was necessary to get acquainted with the actual content of all case files so that the rights of those concerned could be preserved. That seems not to have taken place in every instance, to the detriment of the victims of human rights violations such as the complainant.
58. Based on the above, the Panel would invite the Head of Mission to conduct a full review of the investigative and prosecutorial records of the Mission over its lifespan to have a clear, complete and informed understanding of the causes and circumstances of its inability to fulfil this part of its mandate effectively and in a manner consistent with its human rights obligations. This should help the Head of Mission address the outstanding human rights legacy of these failings with a view to ensuring that the Mission is able to remedy those human rights violations it committed over the course of its existence.

Legal labelling and human rights

59. In its submissions (see, supra, para 56), the Head of Mission suggested that the EULEX WCIU prioritized the review of the so-called 'war crimes files' over the 'missing persons files'. The Panel notes that the proposed distinction cannot be regarded as material here. First, the distinction is legally artificial: instances of enforced disappearance or missing persons can constitute a war crime and have been prosecuted under various categories of war crimes since at least the Second World War. See Vesko Kandić against EULEX, 2016-24, Admissibility Decision and Decision and Findings, 11 December 2020, paras.86-92. The Panel notes in that respect that it was the 'war crime' unit of the Mission that dealt with such cases, thereby making it clear that, even from the institutional point of view, there was no conflict between missing persons and war crimes cases.
60. Secondly, from the point of view of human rights law, the distinction is meaningless. The obligation to investigate that arises in such a case from Articles 2 (procedural limb) and 3 of the European Convention of Human Rights is indifferent to the legal characterization given to the act under local laws. In other words, from the point of view of its human rights obligations, the Mission was no less obliged to investigate such a case if it regarded it as a "war crimes case" or as a "missing person case". See, e.g., Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons (1994); UN General Assembly, Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, UN Doc A/RES/47/133, 18 December 1992 (hereafter 1992 Declaration on Enforced Disappearance), art. 1(1); UN Economic and Social Council, Report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, UN Doc E/CN. 4/1996/38, 1 January 1996; UN Human Rights Committee, CCPR General Comment No. 6: Article 6 (Right to Life), 30 April 1982 (hereafter General Comment No. 6), s. 4; UN General Assembly, Disappeared Persons, UN Doc A/RES/33/173, 20 December 1978 (hereafter UN Doc

A/RES/33/173); UN General Assembly, Question of Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, UN Doc A/49/610/Add.2, 23 December 1994.

61. Furthermore, the Panel observes that the claimed priority given to “missing persons” cases does not appear to be supported by concrete evidence. Instead, it is apparent from the cases that have come before the Panel that cases involving missing persons failed to be properly investigated, whether labelled “war crimes”, “missing persons”, “active” or “closed”. In that sense, the failure appears to be the result of a failure to prioritise this sort of cases rather than having been caused by inadequate, and ultimately irrelevant, legal labelling.
62. The Panel notes that findings similar to the above have already been made in a number of past cases before the Panel. Nevertheless, the Mission has continued to suggest that the legal characterization of the case would validate its failure to meet its human rights obligations. It does not and the Panel invites the Mission not to reiterate these submissions in the future.

The lack of evidence of a pre-existing investigation

63. In its submissions regarding the admissibility of this complaint (see, supra, para. 39), the Mission admitted that,

“[...] there was no involvement of the Mission in investigating the killing of Staniša Stojanović.”
64. The Mission noted that there were several databases in Microsoft Access that were handed over from UNMIK to the Mission. These included one for “war crimes” police files and another for “missing persons” cases. The case of Staniša Stojanović was mentioned in the database for “missing persons” cases, but the record was empty due to the fact that he is deceased.
65. Therefore, the Mission effectively claims to have had no knowledge of the case as an ongoing criminal investigation.
66. The Mission’s explanations fail to convince for other reasons. Irrespective of whether or not UNMIK had been engaged in an ongoing investigation into the killing and death of Staniša Stojanović at the time of the hand-over of case-files to EULEX, the Mission itself had the information it required to justify the opening of an investigation into the violent death of Staniša Stojanović. Its responsibility to investigate flowed directly from its mandate – it was not dependent on the view or consideration of UNMIK. Nor was it dependent on UNMIK having regarded that case as open or closed.
67. Therefore, having in hand the Ante-Mortem Investigation Report of 2005, while possessing an executive mandate until mid-June 2018 the Mission was in a position to investigate the case.
68. From the record, it is apparent that no such efforts were made. Moreover, the Mission could have dedicated attention to this case even after the present complaint was communicated to the HoM in 2016. Instead, the Mission concentrated on complaining about the imperfections of the process of the handing over of the files rather than on constructive, victim-oriented activities. While those shortcomings would have been relevant to evaluating how or how long it took the Mission to get into motion, it cannot excuse or explain its failure to act.

69. The Mission cannot use its own failure to investigate to justify an absence of information. Information arises from investigation, not the other way around. It was therefore the responsibility of the Mission to try and obtain such information. While its obligations in that regard were one of means not of result, it is apparent from the record that it did not even try to seek and obtain information aside from what it inherited from UNMIK.
70. The reasoning contained in the HoM's submissions proves that the Mission did not understand the fact that as long as the case-files handed over by UNMIK remained in EULEX's possession the Mission was seized of those cases, thus competent and responsible to initiate or continue the investigative activity, until the very moment the Kosovo authorities were formally informed about those cases and the files transferred or until it had fulfilled all of its obligations in relation to that case.
71. The Panel notes that the human rights obligations of the Mission are not qualified. Obligations arising from Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention to investigate this sort of cases must be met regardless of the quality of the evidence. Furthermore, as noted above, there was evidence on which an investigation could have been started. It would be absurd if an authority could absolve itself of its investigative obligations because of a lack of information before it has even started to investigate. Obtaining information is the very point of an investigation. If, after an effective and reasonable effort to investigate commensurate with the importance of the rights at stake, no or insufficient information could be obtained, the authorities cannot be held responsible for failing to find more. That, however, is not the case here. The Mission did not even try or start to investigate. It therefore cannot use an absence of (adequate or sufficient) information as a basis for its failure to commence an investigation.

Notification of relatives of the missing person

72. The Mission has not put forward a cogent explanation for its failure to inform the relatives of the missing in this case of its actions or decision not to investigate this killing.
73. In this context, the supposedly inadequate quality or sufficiency of information had no bearing on the Mission's obligation to inform the relatives. With or without such information, it was required to inform the relatives of Staniša Stojanović of their actions and efforts. It failed to do so and has not provided cogent reasons for that failure.
74. Based on the above, the Panel finds that the Mission failed to fulfill its obligation under Article 2 (procedural limb) of the Convention to keep the close relatives of Staniša Stojanović adequately informed of the course of action taken to investigate his disappearance and death.

Regarding Article 3 of the Convention

75. The Panel recalls the case-law of the European Court of Human Rights regarding the circumstances wherein the right to freedom from inhuman treatment may be violated in cases of enforced disappearance. In its Judgment in Basayeva and Others v. Russia (nos. 15441/05 and 20731/04, Judgment of 28 May 2009, para. 159), the Court observed that,

“the question whether a member of the family of a “disappeared person” is a victim of treatment contrary to Article 3 will depend on the existence of special factors which give the suffering of the applicants a dimension and character distinct from the emotional distress which may be regarded as inevitably caused to relatives of a victim of a serious human rights violation. Relevant elements will include the proximity of the family tie, the particular circumstances of the relationship, the extent to which the family member witnessed the events in question, the involvement of the family member in the attempts to obtain information about the disappeared person and the way in which the authorities responded to those enquiries. The Court would further emphasize that the essence of such a violation does not mainly lie in the fact of the “disappearance” of the family member but rather concerns the authorities' reactions and attitudes to the situation when it is brought to their attention. It is especially in respect of the latter that a relative may claim directly to be a victim of the authorities' conduct (see Orhan v. Turkey, no. 25656/94, § 358, 18 June 2002, and Imakayeva v. Russia, no. 7615/02, § 164, 9 November 2006).”

76. In the present case, the complainant's husband, Staniša Stojanović, disappeared in the summer of 1999. Although the Mission at some point obtained information about the complainant's husband's death there has not been by any sort of information provided to the complainant, nor any explanation or undertaking given that the matter would be investigated by the Mission.
77. Based on this sequence of events, it would have been reasonable for the complainant to assume that her husband is still missing and that, if he should come to be identified as dead, an investigation would be opened. Only through the communications between the Panel and the Head of Mission has it now become clear that there was, in fact, information about his death, but no ongoing investigation into the disappearance and killing of Staniša Stojanović.
78. In these circumstances, the Panel considers that complete disregard by the Mission of its obligation to conduct an investigation into the disappearance and death of Staniša Stojanović, and the apparent casualness with which they dealt with this case, constitutes precisely such special factors which warrant the conclusion that the Mission's inaction with respect to the complainant amounts to a violation of her right to freedom from inhuman treatment, as guaranteed by Article 3 of the Convention. As it was indicated in a judgment by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, “the violation of those relatives' mental and moral integrity is a direct consequence of his forced disappearance. The circumstances of such disappearances generate suffering and anguish, in addition to a sense of insecurity, frustration and impotence in the face of the public authorities' failure to investigate” (see case of Blake v. Guatemala, Judgment of January 24, 1998, Merits, para 114).

79. The Mission has reiterated a submission that it had already made in earlier cases to the effect that it stands ready to help should new information regarding the complainant's relative become available.
80. The Panel has previously expressed its circumspection about such submissions, in particular, as it could give the complainant the impression that the Mission is still involved in the case, while in fact it is not. Such a statement is moreover inconsistent with the approach of the Mission while insisting that it may not do anything in those cases due to the lack of an executive mandate and out of respect for the independence of the authorities of Kosovo. Furthermore, as already noted, the Mission knows that without an investigation, such information is unlikely to become available. It is therefore necessary for the Mission to add substance to its words. (See: Q.J. against EULEX, 2016-23, Decision and Findings, 11 December 2020, paras. 60-64.)
81. The Panel is still awaiting a response to its invitation that the Head of Mission should give consideration to adopting a full and effective strategy for the Mission to finally make the issue of the disappeared a priority of the Mission.

82. The Panel would invite the Mission to refrain from reiterating its 'readiness to help', which has already been recorded by the Panel and which does not provide any form of remedy to the complainant but rather may create false expectations in a situation of ongoing suffering due to the unresolved disappearance of a close relative.

Conclusions and findings

83. Based on the above, the Panel finds that the Mission has violated the rights of the complainant under Article 2 (procedural limb) and 3 of the Convention by failing to investigate the disappearance of her relative and failing to provide her and other close relatives with any information regarding this case. Considering the seriousness of the rights concerned, the gravity of the Mission's failure and the length of time concerned, the violation must be regarded as particularly serious. The violation is also ongoing.
84. The Head of Mission is therefore invited to take steps and measures that are commensurate with this fact, as recommended below.
85. Based on those findings, the Panel considers it unnecessary to make additional findings regarding Articles 8 and 13 of the Convention. It is quite apparent, however, that the conduct of the Mission has had a negative effect on the rights of the complainant as are protected by those provisions. In his assessment of what measures or steps should be taken to remedy the violations recording in the present decision, the Head of Mission is invited to account for this fact.
86. In this context, the Panel invites the Mission to give due consideration to the necessity and effectiveness of raising repeatedly the same arguments and points, which have already been addressed in earlier cases. The Panel invites the Mission to anchor its future submissions in an analysis of the Mission's activities as viewed from the perspective of its human rights obligations.
87. The Panel would also invite the Head of Mission to give consideration to the necessity for the Mission to conduct a transparent and effective review of its activities and legacy – in particular, from the point of view of its human rights obligations – so that lessons are learnt from the experience of the Mission for future such endeavours.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE PANEL UNANIMOUSLY

FINDS that the complaint is admissible pursuant to Articles 2 (procedural limb), 3, 8 and 13 of the European Convention of Human Rights;

FINDS that the Mission has violated the rights of the complainant as protected under Articles 2 (procedural limb), and 3 of the Convention;

FINDS FURTHER that the violations are serious and ongoing and that they, therefore, call for the adoption of remedial measures commensurate with the violations;

CALLS UPON the Head of Mission to adopt remedial measures commensurate to the gravity of the violations involved;

FINDS that it does not need to make findings on the merits in respect of Articles 8 and 13 of the Convention;

INVITES THE HEAD OF MISSION, in particular, to review the interpretation currently given to the nature and scope of the Mission's human rights obligations and to give consideration to the following:

1. The Panel invites the Head of Mission to consider formally acknowledging the violation of the rights of the complainant by the Mission and to offer adequate relief for it.
2. The Panel invites the Mission to continue looking for, and to identify, the prosecution office responsible for the investigation of this case.
3. The Panel further invites the Mission to inquire with the competent prosecutor whether the matter is being investigated and, if not, why that is.
4. The Panel invites the Mission to consider what concrete and meaningful steps should be taken to contribute to moving forward the investigation of cases of enforced disappearance/missing persons. The Panel is willing to continue to engage with the Head of Mission in trying to find solutions for that purpose. The Panel wishes to note, however, that steps taken thus far by the Mission are inadequate from the point of view of the Mission's human rights obligations and incapable of contributing meaningfully to resolving those cases. It is high time for the Mission to do more.
5. The Panel invites the Head of Mission to carefully consider what remedies are still available to the Mission in a case such as the present one where the Mission has been found to have violated the rights of a relative of a missing person and to inform the Panel of its conclusions.
6. The Panel invites the Mission to distribute the present Decision to
  - i. Relevant personnel within the Mission;
  - ii. Relevant officials of the European Union who have responsibility for Kosovo, the Balkans region, Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) missions, or human rights issues.

INVITES the Mission to report to the Panel regarding the above recommendations at its earliest convenience and no later than 15 November 2022.
